The Talking Cat

Freddy stared at Fluffy. The ginger cat stared back at Freddy. Freddy rubbed his forehead. Something very strange was going on. Maybe he was coming down with a cold. But he could have sworn that Fluffy said something.

‘Puss, puss, puss,’ he began carefully.

Fluffy flicked his ears grumpily. ‘I’ve got a name. I do wish you’d stop calling me ‘puss’.’

Freddy gasped. Fluffy HAD spoken. ‘You can speak,’ he said.

‘Yes I can speak.’ said Fluffy. ‘And there are a few changes I want to ask for. The first is food. The tinned stuff you give me is disgusting. I need fresh fish. The second is my name. I hate it. In future I want you to call me Prince. The other cats will respect me more if I’m called Prince. The third thing is where I sleep. I don’t like the kitchen at night; it’s cold. From now on I want to sleep at the end of your bed. And I’ll need my own special blanket, thank you.’

Freddy nodded.

It looked like there was a new boss in the house!
